

Daily Legislative Update

Tuesday, January 29, 2019

Mother Nature continues her quest of turning the Hoosier State into the Antarctica of the Midwest, but that doesn't mean that the work stops for the Legislature. Expect another busy day at the Statehouse today, with ten committees in total set to gather. House Ways and Means Committee will hear from the State's Workforce Development, Natural Resources and Environmental Management Departments this morning as members present their respective budget proposals. The House's fiscal committee will then meet upon session's adjournment to hear public testimony on a select few bills.

As we mentioned yesterday, the window continues to shrink for bills yet to receive their day in committee, so expect to see lots of amendments to bills that are currently on second and third readings. This strategy is utilized by legislators who still want their proposals to become law, but can no longer bank on their bill in its entirety making it to the finish line.

If we can provide any further clarification as to where certain bills are in the legislative process or what steps will come next, please let us know.
