

Daily Legislative Update

Wednesday, February 27, 2019

The first half of the legislative session is now officially in the books and legislators have adjourned for the next five days. They will return on Monday refreshed and ready to tackle what is sure to be an action packed second half. In light of the short week, this will also be the last update until Monday.

All but one bill cleared 3rd reading in the Senate on Tuesday and now the proposals will be sent to the House for further debate. While Senators finished 3rd readings, House members got a head start on 1st readings, assigning a large portion of their chamber's bills to committees. They will finish out all adopted bills from today and any other outliers after the break. The Senate will follow suit and dedicate much of their time next week deciding which bills will receive the first wave of public hearings.

Updated bill track lists will be sent out this afternoon and will have all defeated bills wiped from each report. If there are any questions regarding your individual reports or clarification on next steps of the legislative process, please let us know.
